

^juSY^] ORCHESTRA ^ A POEM OF DANCING* 41

71.

As the victorious twins of LMJ2A $nd
JOVE, (That taught the Spartans dancing on the sands - Of swift Euwtas) dance in heaven above_s
Knit and united with eternal bands ;
Among the stars , their double image stands, Where "both are earned with an equal pace, Together jumping in their turning race*

9*-

This is the net, wherein the sun's bright eye* VENUS and MARS entangled did behold / For in this dance, their arms they so imply, As each doth seem, the other to enfold.
What if lewd wits another tale have told,
Of jealous VULCAN₉ and of iron chains !
Yet this true sense, that forged he contains*

73-

These various forms ,qf dancing, LOVE did frame, And besides these₃ a hundred millions mo[r]e ; And as he did invent, he taught the same : With goodly gesture, and with comely show, Now keeping state, now humbly "honouring low. A nd ever for the persons and the place, He taught most fit, and best according grace*

74-

For LOVE, within his fertile working brain,
Did then conceive- those gracious Virgins three,
Whose civil moderation did maintain
All decent order and convemency,
And fair respect, and seemly modesty :
And then, he thought it fit they should be born, That their sweet presence , Dancing might adorn.
